Romantic Porto

A sophisticated and "very british"
ambience.

A sophisticated and "very british" ambience.

In the 19th century, Porto was already a city undergoing great expansion with tastes influenced by the presence of British families in certain quarters. Having settled in the city, mainly from the 18th century onwards and dedicating themselves largely to the Port Wine trade, those families brought with them their liking for football and golf, going for baths on the beaches in Foz, opening up public gardens and an aesthetic change towards neoclassicism. On this tour, we relive a certain romantic ambience by visiting quarters, buildings and gardens that were important at the time but especially by using the means of transport that Porto pioneered in the 19th century in the Iberian Peninsula: the tram.
